School Safety and Campus Security Study

E. L. Tarlton & Associates teamed up with the MXD Collaborative to conduct a Crime Prevention Through Environmental Design study for three Metro Atlanta High Schools. The three schools were Central Gwinnett High School, in Gwinnett County, South Cobb High School, and Campbell High School in Cobb County. All three high schools have fairly diverse student populations with student bodies around 1,500. These schools were selected as pilots for this study by the local school boards in the counties where they are located.

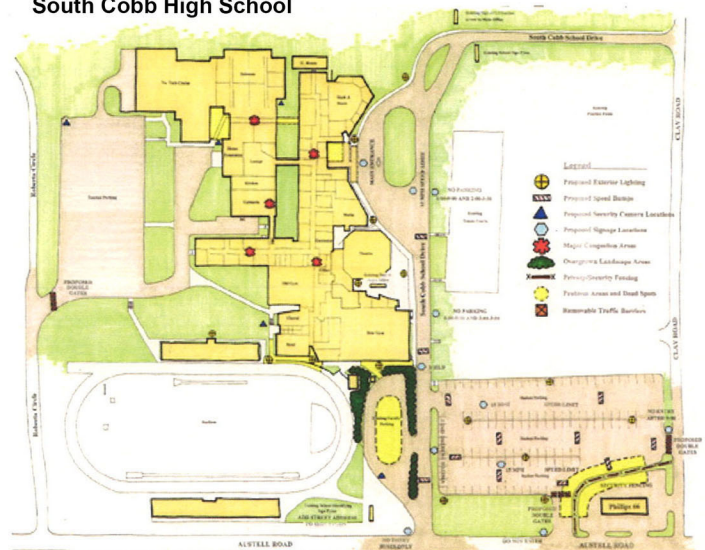

Our CPTED team visited each school over the course of several months. Demographic and crime data for the neighborhoods surrounding each school were also collected as part of the overall CPTED analysis process. The analysis of the school & neighborhood environment further included computer modeling of the movement patterns surrounding each school, each school's campus and each school's interior. Since the location of a school campus, building entrances, and the layout of corridors all have security implications, these models were used to assess where people and students were likely to be in and around each school.
